“The Hidden Secrets of the Introverted Speaker: And How Extroverts Can Use Them Too.”

How would you describe an introvert? Common answers people give are shy, soft-spoken, even anti-social. But what about “a prolific speaker” or “a contributing communicator?” Most people don’t provide these answers, but in truth, these answers are more accurate than the common ones.

Many myths and misunderstandings dominate the world’s thinking when it comes to introversion. And the unfortunate truth is that extroverts and introverts alike exacerbate these misconceptions. However, introverts can be invaluable assets to teams, corporations, and other organizations. The key is learning how to tap that resource the correct way.

In this keynote speech, Aaron discusses growing up as an introvert, the challenges he faced as an introverted person, and how he overcame the misconceptions to become a world champion of public speaking, an international speaker, and as he claims, “a thriving introvert.”

Introverts in the audience will learn how to use their innate introversion to their advantage in life and their careers. Extroverts in the audience will learn how they can engage their introverted colleagues and even use some of these introverted secrets for themselves.
